My dad is a big disapprover of the LGBTQ+ community. While, I am am not part of the community itself, I do in fact support it. Whatever makes people happy is there business. Someone could be in love with a tree for all I care! As long as they're happy. However, when my dad talks bad about LGBTQ+ I just sit there awkwardly, not saying anything. Am I wrong to believe in something my parents disapprove? I told him about pride month (when it was) and he' said: "What is there to be proud of?". I'm really sorry to all you LGBTQ+ who are reading this post on my dad's behalf.

I am not a member of the LGBTQ+ community myself, but I do support it. Even the people that hate LGBTQ+ will have to understand that, they’re not going away. They are going to stay, until the human race dies. So I think people that don’t support LGBTQ+ should at least accept that it’s going to be here.

It's not that my parents don't like the community. (In fact, one of my closest friends is gay. He and my mom once got started on what color they wanted their hair to be, it was epic!)
However, both times I've told them that I have a crush on a boy (and I'm willing to bet this would happen with my newest dude crush that I just got yesterday), they encourage me, but tell me not to get my hopes up. Okay, that's some good parenting right there. But the day I decide that I crush on a girl, even after I made it perfectly clear that I know what I'm feeling, they doubt it. I'm not sure what runs through their heads, but I'm wondering if it's not because they're both straight, so they would think that I would be, too. But surprise! Guess what, Universe has decided that I'm bi!

(@Jim- I know it sounds like I'm being sarcastic, but hear me out: that's a really polite way to say it, thank you. I'm seriously being genuine, here. A lot of people I know, if they didn't agree, would have made it very, VERY plain. And I've only told 3 friends, in real life, that I'm bi.)

I don't know about my parents... They just don't talk about it. Maybe they aren't that informed of it, or just ignore it. I'm not sure if I should ask them about it...
